1. During the same period that the undersigned was recently at Rome, subject was called to his headquarters in that city, ostensibly on administrative matters.

2. Subject presented himself to Col. DE FRANCESCO, who made superficial attempts to clear up a muddled matter of a stolen car (requisitioned by subject and assigned to another officer) during subject's period of service at CEDIC.

3. DE FRANCESCO then asked subject how he liked his work, who his Italian contacts were, etc. Source admitted the identities of JK44/1 and JK44/2, referring, of course, to their proper names. This step was taken because source's contacts with his two subsources are known to Capt. Dario TOMMASELLI of the Genova CS office.

4. When subject stated that his relations with the latter officer were somewhat strained because he would not pass information from our office to CS, DE FRANCESCO called Major BONAVENTO on the telephone, apparently in an attempt to effect closer cooperation between source and TOMMASELLI.

5. After a ten-minute talking marathon consisting of naught but "ho capito" and "si, si", DE FRANCESCO told source to "forget about it" and in various ways tried to convey the impression to source that he was not to bend over backwards working for us.

6. Source believes that Capt. GAPPALLO (ex-head of San Remo/OS) may be in back of his estrangement with TOMMARSHALLI, which is plausible, since they have known each other for several years and source refused to permit certain acts of GAPPALLO to go unheeded.
